

Jackie Glass is part of a new generation involved with her family, her profession and her community to make a difference.

While still in high school, Jackie worked as a waitress to help buy her school supplies and school clothes. She continued as a waitress, working her way through college at the University of Georgia, graduating with a degree in journalism.

Her journalism career brought Jackie to Las Vegas in 1978 beginning as a radio news reporter. She moved quickly to television and served as both an anchor and crime beat reporter. As she followed the course of the trials she covered, she became more interested in the field of law and decided to take that challenge.

Once again, she worked her way through college, graduating from the University of San Diego School of Law. In 1984, Jackie passed the Nevada Bar exam before graduation, received her Juris Doctor Degree, was admitted to the Nevada Bar, and married her husband, Steve Wolfson.

The couple recently celebrated their seventeenth wedding anniversary. They have two daughters, Rachel, 15, and Rebecca, 10.

With her husband, Jackie worked to build their successful law practice while helping at her daughters' school, chaperoning field trips to Washington, DC, supporting the Girl Scouts and projects such as Nevada Reading Week.

On the professional side, Jackie has lectured at the UNLV Boyd School of Law, spoken on law topics at local high schools, and appeared on the KLVX show, "Law and the Layman". She served as a member of the Las Vegas Housing Authority Board and spent six years as a Board Member of the Senior Citizens Law Project.

Now, as a candidate for District Court Judge, Department 5, Jackie Glass brings the same determination, sense of family and community, and professional dedication to a new challenge.
